DOT to consider improvements to I-95

A staff report

The state Department of Transportation will hold eight public meetings this summer to find out what motorists want in the way of improvements to Interstate 95.

DOT officials said Wednesday that widening the aging highway is one likely result of a two-year-long study they have undertaken.

How to pay for the widening and other improvements will be an important question.

"We'll look at tolling," said Greer B. Beaty, the DOT's communications director.

I-95, a north-south arterial for the eastern United States, stretches for 182 miles through eight North Carolina counties.

Dates, times and places for the public hearings have not been set, but they will occur during July.

DOT engineers are expected to make recommendations to state officials for modernizing the highway by the fall of 2011.
